— Aconite. —

Monks Hood, Aconitum Napellus, Aconitum Scyrotorum. A boy ate some of the leaves instead of Parsley - In 3 hours there was a burning in the mouth, throat and stomach swooning and death. Upon a post mortem examination there was found to be an inflammatory black upon the stomach and dark patches; the cerebral vessels were greatly distended with a dark fluid. Therefore may be used in acute congestion of brain not arising from typhus, acute gastritis resulting from cold or over-eating. Another person after eating leaves experienced heat in mouth followed by swelling of face dimness of sight, general feeling of numbness, formication stupor insensibility and death. Therefore useful in paralysis, apoplexy, A man wife and child ate some roots at dinner In  $\frac{1}{4}$  of an hour there was burning and numbness of lips extending to the stomach with vomiting of the dinner with frothy mucus, coldness of the body except the chest &c. In 1524. 48oz of root of Aconite was given to a criminal who
